

CPL AND VGL ANNOUNCE ALLIANCE

Dallas, TX - Tuesday, November 28, 2006 - Video Gamers League (VGL), the first gaming league for console players, today announced a partnership with the Cyberathlete Professional League (CPL) the world's first PC game sports league. Under the alliance, VGL will hold console tournaments at CPL events and manage the competitions.

“For years, console gamers have petitioned CPL to add console gaming to our events,” said Angel Munoz, President of CPL. “This partnership with VGL will allow console gamers to take part in the CPL experience and still allow CPL to concentrate on its core business, PC gaming.”

“CPL has been a pioneer in competitive gaming. They have laid the groundwork for all the leagues that have come after them,” said Jeff Gross, President of VGL. “We are thrilled to be working with CPL. Both PC gamers and console gamers will benefit from this partnership.”

The first event to feature VGL managed tournaments will be the CPL 2006 Championship Finals, which is scheduled to take place December 16-20, 2006 in Dallas, Texas. Game titles will include Rainbow Six Vegas, Splinter Cell Double Agent, Dead or Alive 4, Tekken 5, and Soul Calibur III. Additional games and tournament details will be announced soon.

About VGL

The Video Gamers League (VGL) founded by Jeff Gross is the first gaming league for console players. The first VGL event was held November 20-21, 1999. Since its inception, VGL has executed over 100 tournaments across the United States. For more information visit <http://www.vgleague.com>

About CPL

Launched June 26, 1997, the Cyberathlete Professional League (CPL) holds major international events and has led the transformation of videogame competitions to a professional sport. Over the past nine years, the CPL has hosted 50 international main events and sanctioned over 500 international qualifiers. For more information visit <http://www.thecpl.com>

Media Contacts:

VGL

Jeff Gross

(214) 675-5955

jeff@vgleague.com

CPL

George Kaspiris

(972) 619-3000

george.kaspiris@thecpl.com